DIE HERAUSGEBER:

Neven Jovanović is associate professor at the University of Zagreb, Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences, Department of Classical Philology. His research interests are Croatian Neo-Latin literature and application of digital methods to philology.

Johanna Luggin is a post-doctoral researcher at the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute for Neo-Latin Studies, where she works on Latin literature and early modern mentalities. She recently edited the poem De mirabilibus Pecci by Thomas Hobbes.

Luka Špoljarić is an intellectual historian of the Renaissance whose research explores the diffusion of humanism across the Adriatic. He held fellowships at Villa I Tatti, University of Zagreb, Harvard University and the Warburg Institute.

Lav Šubarić is a key researcher at the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute for Neo-Latin Studies where he works on literary history, history of education, and the connection between Latin and national identities.

Research during the last decades has demonstrated the critical importance of Neo-Latin literature for the formation of cultural identities on both a European, as well as on a national and regional level, especially in those parts of Europe which have not previously been at the centre of scholarly interest.

The studies collected in this volume explore different aspects of the Neo-Latin literature in Croatia and Tyrol from the Renaissance to the dawn of modernity. Their interests range from the interpretation of individual genres or periods, to comparison of the two literatures and evaluation of the very concepts of national and regional literature in the field of Neo-Latin studies. It is the first volume published in English to examine either Croatian or Tyrolean Latinity to such an extent.
